INTEGRATING MEDITATION INTO THE MESSINESS OF EVERYDAY LIFE

Meditation isn't just something you do for 10 minutes a day—it's something you live. In this 5-week course, we'll move beyond the idea of "trying to feel better" and explore what it actually means to integrate meditation into everyday life. Not when things are quiet, but in the middle of stress, distraction, uncertainty, and the moments you'd usually rather avoid. Because the truth is, things don't always get better. Life still shows up the way it does—unpredictable, uncomfortable, and often out of your control. And if your practice only works when things are calm, it's not really supporting you where it matters most. This course isn't about fixing yourself, silencing your mind, or becoming a calmer, more "put together" version of you. It's about learning how to be with your experience as it is—without constantly needing it to change. Each week, we'll explore simple but powerful ways to bring awareness into your actual life: your conversations, your reactions, your stress, your routines. You'll begin to notice where you check out, where you resist, and what becomes possible when you stop trying to escape the moment you're in. This isn't about doing meditation perfectly. It's about not leaving it behind the moment life gets real. If you've ever felt like meditation works... until life happens—this course is for you. Instructor: Mark Van Buren
